

Favorite quotes from the Dowager Countess of Downton Abbey:

ROBERT, EARL OF GRANTHAM

Mama, you've already looked him up in the stud books and made inquiries about the fortune, don't pretend otherwise. Are you afraid someone will think you're American if you speak openly?

VIOLET, DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

I doubt it'll come to that.

May 2, 2014

And the answer is, no, I don't have a refrigerator yet. The old one is still making ice & keeping things cold. (Although see P.S. below)

And no, I don't want to talk about the weather. It's not polite to complain about the snow and the blizzards and the wind when other parts of the country are getting hit with tornadoes. And besides, that was Monday & Tuesday. It's Friday and 61.

And while I'd like to talk about the funny Weather Channel segment about whether to stay in the car during a tornado or drive away from it or run to a nearby shelter, if there's time of course, or get out and go hide in a ditch - all viable options apparently - that's probably impolite, too. One helpful hint I will pass along - about the only real useful tip I got from the segment - is to keep your car running, if you choose to stay in the car. Air bags don't go off if the car isn't running and deployed airbags might be useful if the car flies into a tree.

But I will say, knowing me, I'd probably panic and try all the options at the same time. And I grew up in Nebraska where you go outside to look when the sirens go off. But that's what watching the Weather Channel has done to me.

I remember in the 80s when I'd visit my aunt in Scottsbluff, she kept her television tuned to the Weather Channel. At that time, the Weather Channel consisted of a static map and music by artists like George Benson. Nothing ever really happened because things like Doppler Radar hadn't really been invented yet. It was kinda like watching a tv imitating fake a fireplace.

But I find myself tuning into the Weather Channel for entertainment more often these days. And I don't mean the weird shows like Reef Wranglers, Prospectors, Lifeguard and Reel Rivals. I have no real idea what goes on in those shows and what the connection to weather is, and I really don't care. I like the live broadcasts when big weather is happening - true reality tv. And, like the segment about staying in the car or running away from a tornado, often highly amusing tv.

For example, the Weather Channel is responsible for creating some of the strangest acronyms: Tor-Con, for example. This one took me a while to figure out. I got the Tor part, which stands for tornado. The con part, though eluded me for a while. I kept thinking in terms of Comic-Con, which is a convention of comic enthusiasts. Tor-Con clearly had nothing to do with people who liked tornadoes. It didn't stand for conflict, or conference, or concern, or connection. But everyone was using it, as in "There is a Tor-Con of 3 for the next 4 hours," or something like that. It's the Weather Channel's own version of the Richter Scale for earthquakes. Okay, I know you've figured it out - it means Condition. But on the Tor-Con page, a tor-con of 4 is defined as a "low chance" of tornadoes while an 8 is a "high probability" of a tornado. I guess calling it a Tor-Chance or a Tor-Prob wasn't sexy enough.

The Weather Channel also has a morning show called AMHQ, which is clear as mud. Broadcasters on the show even refer to the program with the acronym. The Weather Channel also gave us names for winter storms, a process not supported by other meteorologists, like the National Weather Service. But the Weather Channel is all about marketing and it's come a long way from the static maps of the 1980s.

But I didn't want to talk about the Weather Channel. No, I'd rather talk about Ernest Hemingway. He wrote one of my favorite books, A Moveable Feast. Now this book was a favorite when I was in high school. I later reread the book as an adult and afterwards better understood the word misogynist. While the book is no longer a top favorite, Hemingway is one of those master writers who can capture a moment succinctly. He uses no more words than necessary, although he does have one sentence that runs on and on and on...about 123 words or more worth. But that's the exception.

Anyway, A Moveable Feast is not so much a story as it is a collection of impressions. Hemingway was living in Paris in the 1920s, with a bunch of other expats like Gertrude Stein, Ezra Pound, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Ford Maddox Ford, John Dos Passos, and James Joyce. The book was published posthumously in 1964. He wrote about his writing, observations and life in Paris, from cafes to bars to hotels. He told his friend and biographer A.E. Hotchner, "If you are lucky enough to have lived in Paris as a young man, then wherever you go for the rest of your life, it stays with you, for Paris is a moveable feast."

But it's at this time of year that my favorite quote from that book comes to mind. I don't think I ever fully understood what he was talking about until I moved to Wyoming:

"You expected to be sad in the fall. Part of you died each year when the leaves fell from the trees and their branches were bare against the wind and the cold, wintery light. But you knew there would always be the spring, as you knew the river would flow again after it was frozen. When the cold rains kept on and killed the spring, it was as though a young person died for no reason."

That was this week.

P.S. The ice in the freezer is getting soft again. Sigh.

P.P.S (or is it P.S.S.) AMHQ stands for American Headquarters. Like I said, clear as mud.
