VIOLET, DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

How about some house parties? (Discussing how to introduce Lady Mary to men following the death of her betrothed on the Titanic)

CORA, COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

She's been asked to one next month by Lady Ann McNair.

VIOLET, DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

That's a terrible idea. She doesn't know anyone under a hundred.

CORA, COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

I might send her over to visit my aunt. She could get to know New York.

VIOLET, DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GRANTHAM

Oh, I don't think things are quite that desperate.

How To Get Rid Of Your Neighbor For Dummies 101. Hire a bull dozer and demolish the home when nobody's looking.

Yeah. Probably won't work. She got caught, BTW. She apparently told authorities that she thought her neighbors were unsavory. Right. I bet she said that word. But she lives in Florida-or maybe lived, because she's now going to be living in a prison somewhere. I've never understood the attraction of Florida. Too many bugs. But it does have cool theme parks, like the new Harry Potter Park in Orlando. But that's another story.

Anyway, I had some neighbors once with really irritating barking dogs that barked at shadows all night long. I called the cops and told them I thought there was someone wandering around the neighborhood, because, of course, these dogs had never barked before. Cops came. Dogs were ever after quiet. Problem solved. But I never called my neighbors unsavory.

I have a friend who had noisy, bothersome neighbors. To protect the innocent, I'll just say that a bunch of her friends, older than teenagers but spry enough not to get caught, borrowed (loose term) a bunch of for sale signs and, one night, stuck them all in the neighbor's yard. Imagine waking up and finding your house for sale, by multiple realtors. That probably didn't work, either, to get rid of the neighbors, but you can bet that no one called them unsavory. Lots of other names, many unprintable. But never unsavory.

Who uses the word unsavory? Is it like the word "vehicle" that only cops and PA announcers use, as in "Would the owner of the vehicle whose car alarm is going off, please disengage the alarm." Seriously. No one talks like that. When I looked up the word unsavory, hunting for a sentence in which it's used, the first sentence I found was: "His unsavory reputation as a mobster came back to haunt him when he ran for mayor of New York City." So maybe mobsters use the word. I didn't watch the Sopranos, so I wouldn't know about things like that.

But I'm sure you don't want to know about a crazy woman whose first choice in getting rid of the neighbors is to bull doze the place. No, I'm sure you're wondering what is happening with my refrigerator.

I'm happy to report that I have ice again. It started working Sunday night. The moral to this story is to never give up on your old frig. But hedge your bets. So I continued my search for a new one. It was a little bit like the Goldilocks story - too big, too wide, too tall - led by sales clerks who know less about refrigerators than I do. I went back to the store with the pimply faced kid. The store manager was there, too, this time, all decked out in a black suit and red tie, and he proudly proclaimed the kid as "our refrigerator expert." He was just pontificating to impress me, the customer. I had to tell the kid where to find the only KitchenAid unit on the floor. But I was kind. I did it in the stacks, so his manager wouldn't know how uninformed his "expert" was.

I checked another big box store & found one that I feared was too tall. So I left depressed, hoping against hope that I had 68 ½ inches of clearance and I could order my new frig. Nope, and don't start on me about not knowing by heart, the dimensions of my cubby hole of a space for a frig. Just be glad that I measured twice and bought once.

So I started a new search on line and on the phone while sitting on my couch. At the next big box store, the clerk brightly suggested I look on line. Sigh. I explained that their website took a while to load and navigate and that I didn't want to look at 30 different frigs to find the one that fit my dimensions. Perhaps she would know better, being an expert in refrigeration? Of course, I'm not sure she heard all of this because she was busy talking over me. And I, of course, didn't quit talking. I figured that was her job to listen to me. Clearly, we didn't get anywhere.

I called an outlet store in Ft. Collins, but he didn't deliver past the border. He could drop ship it, which means they'd leave it on my door step. I know that Cassidy & Becca would be no help in carting it inside, so that wasn't an option.

So I gave up and started watching House of Cards. I figured I might pick up some tips on how to manipulate people, which could help when buying a frig. Maybe.

The next day I called a local outfit. Now, I had started my search here a couple of weeks ago, without any luck. But this time, wonder of wonders, I got a guy on the phone who knew his stock. And yup, that's where I am buying and it will be here next week. Not July 1. Although, when I went down to the store the next day, a different guy quoted me a price about $500 higher than I had been told on the phone. I was ready to walk out and start all over again. But then he turned the page in the catalog - I'm not making this up - and found my frig. I swear, this shouldn't be this difficult.

So now I will use the word unsavory in a sentence: Buying a refrigerator is an unsavory experience. This is when being affiliated with the mob might have an advantage. I would have had a frig 3 weeks ago. It would not have fit, but there would have been guys, big guys, who would have knocked walls out to make it fit. And I would have said, Thank you very much.
