

Blue Moon Sale!

We will be very, very careful.....

Halloween doesn't get full moons very often regardless of what you see in the movies. The last one was in 2001 and the next won't be until 2039.

And this is a blue moon -- second full moon of the month, another rare occurrence.

So we will celebrate, but we won't pass out candy, have cookies or punch.

For Toad Toters, bring your bag and you will get 25% off your entire purchase. (Don't ask. I still don't have additional bags, I bought t-shirts instead this year.) So that means.....

For mask makers who either got or bought a t-shirt (and we still have some left), you will also get 25% off your purchase. You must wear your t-shirt to get your 25% off.

For everyone else, you can get 15% off entire purchase.

Ground rules: Everyone must wear a mask (the cloth mask or a PPE); and it must be worn over your nose. Please try to wear a regular mask and not a bandana or pulled up neck cowl. Other costumes are welcome but not essential to the sale.

If I get too many people in the store at once, I'll try to keep everyone spaced apart and may limit the number in the store at any one time. We will work together on this to keep us all safe.

October 30, 2020

Do you ever make up stories about the people who take your orders at drive through fast food places? Probably not. I mean, you really shouldn't.

But occasionally there is one person who just makes you wonder-like the very very cheerful person at ... let's just say a fast food restaurant in town. She's just not cheerful to me, I'm sure. I bet she's cheerful to everyone, person after person, car after car. And it's hard for me to imagine how she keeps up her cheerfulness, behind a mask, window open to the cold, hat on to keep warm. She is just amazingly cheerful.

So of course I imagined what she must be like at home. That much cheerfulness has got to be tiring. It's hard for me to keep it up during the day, and I know some of you have undoubtedly caught me on a grumpy day. That usually happens when the quilt I'm working on just isn't coming out right, or I can't figure out the pattern, or I'm ripping, or I'm running out of time to get things done-you know, a normal day at the shop.

So I got to thinking, maybe this very cheerful woman is a Jekyll/Hyde. She keeps up her positive and cheerful - did I mention this woman is really cheerful? - attitude for 8 hours at a stretch, says goodbye cheerfully to her co workers, and then goes home to her family (this is a woman who can't be living alone) and turns into a Hyde, Baby Jane, Mommy Dearest (I've been watching movies again). And when a family member comes up missing, no one suspects this delightfully cheerful woman from the fast food place. (I'm also reading murder mysteries right now.)

See what I mean? You really shouldn't start to make up stories about the cheerful people who take your money at a fast food place. And she is really cheerful. It's quite delightful.

But that's not what I want to talk about. No, I want to talk about the weird things you learn from books.

Back in March, April or was it May, I swore off reading books centered during the WWII time period. But it's hard escaping them.

I checked out two books from the library, one I knew was set during WWII and one I thought was just going to be a murder mystery. And I started another book about women spies during the war. Fortunately, I'm also reading a book about a hangman and his daughter, set in hangman times - a long time ago.

Now, just so I'm clear here, I dip in and out of all sorts of books at the same time. I also have an action adventure book I'm listening to in the car, a book about the Los Angeles Library in the bathroom-and let me be even more clear. I've been reading that book since December. I'm not like my dad who could spend hours in the bathroom. The only family I have to escape from are the dogs and they tend to invade my privacy without asking first.

Where was I. Oh, yeah, reading different books at the same time. For me, books are sometimes like quilts. I work on several at the same time, just because I might be bored with one part of a quilt, and excited about another quilt. Same with books. When I get tired of all the WWII stuff, I switch to the hangman book. It's an odd sort of refreshing change.

But the murder mystery book is where I came across something that I had never heard of before: water glassing eggs to preserve them. The murder mystery is set in the present, but the murder happened during WWII. So half of the story is told during WWII and set in a small village that was eventually abandoned and turned into a reservoir and later drained - which is when the body was found.

What's interesting and depressing at the same time in these WWII books is the deprivations endured by everyone, from rationing to black outs to bombings. The rationing parts I do find interesting: like using makeup for legs and painting a black line down the back of the leg to mimic stockings. Actually one of the women claimed she tried using gravy as a leg makeup paste, but the flies that followed her were so bad she didn't try it again. I hadn't heard that one before, but it's true. Or the coupons used to buy clothing, food, alcohol, cigarettes, or making blouses out of abandoned silk parachutes. Or keeping curls in your hair buy using a sugar water concentration to set the curls.

And the blackout stories were interesting: trying to stay on the road when driving, which wasn't often because gas was rationed. Or counting the number of hand rails or poles as you walked to tell you when to make the turn to go home. Or using white paint as a reflecting device to help people see the sidewalks and roads and the curbs. Very important. Or the woman who refused to use black out curtains on the western windows, because the Germans wouldn't be approaching from that side.

But the odd thing that came up in the book was water glassing eggs as a way to preserve them. The author didn't explain, just mentioned that eggs were preserved from summertime when hens were laying so that fresh eggs would be available in the winter. So I looked it up.

You need a bucket with a lid, hydrated lime, and clean water (not well water, something closer to distilled water), a scale, fresh clean eggs but not washed eggs, just eggs clean of dirt. Mix the lime & water (often helps to add the lime to hot or boiled water to dissolve more easily). Cool water to room temp. Add eggs. Put the lid on the bucket. Store in a cool place.

Now for the eggs: You can't wash the eggs because that will allow the lime to seep into the eggs because the shells are porous. This means you can't use store bought eggs. On fresh eggs there is the "bloom" on the egg, which protects the egg from bacteria. The bloom is deposited by the hen when she lays the egg. For water glassed eggs you need to use eggs that still have the bloom on them (they also need to be free of dirt). Actually, eggs with the bloom still on will last up to three months, but that's another experiment.

Add eggs to the water/lime mixture. Depending on how you stack your eggs, you can get up to 80 eggs in a three gallon bucket. Store the tub of eggs at room temp for....6 months, if you like. The woman trying this as an experiment put the eggs in storage from Sept - Feb (apparently you can store up to 2 years). She reported that when she tried the first egg she did a comparison test: water glassed egg vs fresh egg. She broke them into individual bowls and they looked and smelled the same. So she cooked them and the water glassed eggs tasted just like fresh.

Other hints: if you want to hard boil a water glassed egg, you need to pin prick the shell, because the lime has hardened the shell. Also before you crack a water glassed egg you need to rinse it well to get the lime off the shell because the lime will cause the eggs to curdle.

So the lesson to be learned here - read more murder mystery books.

P.S. Don't miss the moon rises tonight and tomorrow. Yesterday's moon came up about 5:30. It looked like a ghost moon-huge silver/white disc hovering over the horizon. Tonight (5:53) and tomorrow (6:18), it's bound to be orange. Spooky. Happy Halloween.

Nolting Longarm Machines

Nolting has 5 main machines, each with different reaches: from 17" to 30" depending on the machine. They are sold with or without a frame, but after I saw & helped set up one of the steel frames this week, I recommend buying the frame. All machines, except for the Standard-- the most economical machine-- have a stitch regulator. I recommend a stitch regulator. All machines can be equipped with a computer and there are a couple of different ones to choose from. In addition, you can get an extended table base so that you can use rulers, you can get larger bobbins on some of the models and on the frames you can get hydraulic lifts to raise and lower the tables. In the coming weeks, I will print out more information on each model.

The best entry level machine is the Fun Quilter. It comes in 17", 20" & 23" reach. It comes with the Intellistitch Equalizer stitch regulator, standard speed control, needle up/down, and fixed handles in the front & rear. This machine can also be equipped with a computer.

The Pro Machine has the Intellistitch Turbo stitch regulator, single stitch option, standard speed control, needle up/down and customizable handles in the front & rear. The Pro Machine comes in 20", 24" and 30" reach with 10-12" of inside height. There are easy dials on the front to set stitch length and other options. This machine can also be equipped with a computer.

The NV Machine is the newest in the fleet of Nolting machines. This machine has a touch screen with progra mmable stitch regulation. You can stitch in 4 different stitch modes plus single stitch and needleup/down. It also has an adjustable brightness LED work light. This machine can also be equipped with a computer.

Nolting also has a commercial machine with the Intellistitch Equalizer stitch regulator, standard speed control, needle up/down, and fixed handles in the front & rear. This machine can also be equipped with a computer.

Normal Shop Hours:
Monday-Saturday 10-5
Sunday 1-5
Closed first Sunday of month (and some holidays)
